

Central Intelligence Agency
Washington, D.C.
(703) 482-7676

George V. Lauder
Director, Public Affairs

16 May 1986

DCI:

Bill,

Herewith per your request are two letters that Bob Sims drew from for his speech before aviation executives. You were interested in seeing these again in connection with a possible article on leaks for the "Washingtonian" magazine.

STAT

George V. Lauder

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

WASHINGTON, D. C. 20505

PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Phone: (703) 351-7676

21 April 1986

Mr. John Seigenthaler
Editor, Editorial Page
USA TODAY
1000 Wilson Boulevard
Arlington, Virginia 22209

Dear Mr. Seigenthaler:

USA TODAY's 11 April editorial "Too Many Secrets Are Real Security Risk" is disappointing. It dismisses the President and Director Casey's concerns that the disclosure and publication of sensitive information seriously damages the nation's ability to protect its citizens. It also blithely insists that only information provided by this country's traitors to the nation's adversaries is harmful, while the sensitive U.S. national security information the KGB and its cohorts read in the U.S. press is considered to be not damaging. Curious reasoning indeed! The problem is as President Truman put it in a 1951 press conference: "Whether it be treason or not, it does the U.S. just as much harm for those military (and national intelligence) secrets to be made known to potential enemies through open publication as it does for military (and national intelligence) secrets to be given to an enemy through the clandestine operation of spies."

Make no mistake about it, intelligence comes from real people around the world who risk their lives to provide information of benefit to the U.S. and the free world. Intelligence also comes from our allies and from sophisticated technical systems that cost billions of dollars to develop and maintain. Director Casey is charged by law with protecting the identities of these people, the information our allies provide, and the capabilities of our sensitive and expensive technical systems. In most cases that means that the information provided by these sources must be classified, since its publication will enable our adversaries to identify and destroy these assets. In rare instances when source-identifying data can be eliminated or the President deems that it is in the national security interest, intelligence can be officially released and published.

It is unfortunate that USA TODAY cannot differentiate between the very serious damage done to the nation's security through the publication of leaked sensitive intelligence and the need for the American public to possess as much information as possible to make informed judgments about the conduct of the government's business. Both concerns are real, different, but clearly not mutually exclusive. There can be freedom of the press and a sensitivity by the press to the need to protect military, diplomatic and intelligence activities that defend this nation. The nation can have both freedom and security, but without security it will have no freedom.

Mr. John Seigenthaler

-2-

21 April 1986

While it is obviously desirable for the press to seek out, publish and criticize malfeasance or nonfeasance on the part of individuals or government entities, it is injurious to the nation's interest for the press to attempt deliberately to ferret out and expose the sources and methods used in intelligence collection. It is equally damaging to publish such information provided by leakers without attempting to determine the degree of damage that will result from such exposure.

USA TODAY and many of the press put the blame for the hemorrhage of secrets on the leakers, but the press itself caters to such leakers, encourages their purposes and then absolves itself from the damage that results to the nation's security from its actions. In short, the press often carelessly tosses about the verbal hand grenades that a leaker hands it. When they explode, killing people and inflicting great damage, the press shrugs and says in effect, well, it's a free country. It seems to those of us in the U.S. national security agencies who are endeavoring to protect this nation's security and thereby its freedoms, including the very freedom the press enjoys, that the press cannot have it both ways. The press is outraged when hostile spies are uncovered in the U.S., but happily conveys equally harmful information to our adversaries by printing very damaging leaks. Why aren't the leakers who have betrayed our government's trust condemned by the press at least to the same extent that it chastizes those who spend thousands of dollars for costly aircraft toilet seats? It seems to us there is a good deal of media hypocrisy in all this.

Director Casey asked that the press of this nation work with CIA and the other national security organizations in protecting this nation's legitimate secrets. Some organizations and individual journalists already do. I strongly encourage the other members of the press to do so too. After all, CIA protects this nation, including all of you in the press. By damaging our capabilities you damage yourself. Let us work together as much as we can for the good of our country.

Sincerely,

George V. Lauder
Director, Public Affairs

STAT

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

WASHINGTON, D. C. 20505

PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Phone: (703) 351-7676

8 May 1986

Mr. Strobe Talbott
TIME Magazine -
1050 Connecticut Avenue
Suite 850
Washington, D.C. 20036-5334

Strobe,

The Director asked me to ensure that Ralph Davidson and Henry Grunwald get copies of his speech to the American Society of Newspaper Editors. They are attached.

While there is a clear need for the administration to go after its leakers in a vigorous way and for the Congress to do the same, it seems to me the media has some responsibilities in this area, too. Attached is a recent letter I sent to USA TODAY. It went apparently--and not surprisingly--into the newspaper's "circular file."

I have tried for two and a half years to bring the media to an understanding that this is their intelligence service and that it helps protect the very freedoms the media enjoys. I have had some success. Nonetheless, with others it has been like peeing into a gale. There is a lot of arrogance out there and total contempt for the need to protect intelligence agents and unique technical collection systems which are extremely difficult to create and replace. These sensitive systems cost billions and it takes years to redo them in some novel way to circumvent the countermeasures our adversaries place in our way, thanks to the help that the media provides them. In the meantime, once they are compromised by the media we are deprived of the information they can provide on early warning, arms control, terrorism and other priority national intelligence needs.

This country can have a free press--it certainly needs one--and a superb intelligence service. It needs that, too. We have to work together--you in the media and we in the intelligence business--to iron out our problems. That takes a willingness to listen, not lecture. The media tends to be better at the latter than the former in matters of this type.

Mr. Strobe Talbott

-2-

8 May 1986

The Agency had under consideration your request for the particulars of any complaint we might have against TIME. Before we could arrive at a decision as to how we should respond, Henry Grunwald issued a statement to the press saying that the Agency would not provide TIME with the information it requested. Since he appears to know everything, including what we are going to do in the Agency before we decide ourselves, perhaps we should let his omniscience take precedence over our decision-making process.

Sincerely,

George V. Lauder
Director, Public Affairs

STAT